

While I think it would be a good idea for the FCC to pursue national telephone privacy legislation, I would encourage it do so as minimum standard, allowing states to enact their own more restrictive regulations if they decide to do so.

I am very pleased with the tough telephone privacy laws that we have in Indiana. The laws and the system we have implemented really work. For my part, I would not want to see us forced back to a less restrictive set of regulations, which I understand might happen if the current FCC proposal is enacted.
